Inside the Faculty Studio Series Interviewer Position

Position Announcement:

Inside the Faculty Studio Series Interviewer (non-paid)

Position Description:

Sophomore Year Programs is looking for students to be the host/interviewer for the Inside the Faculty Studio Series. The series is loosely based on the "Inside the Actors Studio", a TV show where James Lipton interviews various actors and actresses about their lives and their careers. We are looking to do the same with Long Island University faculty members and we want student interviewers. Do you have what it takes to be an interviewer?

As an interviewer you would be responsible for researching and creating questions to ask faculty members. Questions must be relevant and appropriate in relation to the faculty member. We intend on having three tapings each semester on Thursdays from 11:00am-11:50am. This is a great opportunity to gain leadership skills, interviewing experience, and to get to know your professors outside of the classroom setting.

General Requirements and Responsibilities for this position include:

- Must be available on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11:00am- 11:50am
- Have strong research and interviewing skills
- Strong knowledge of Long Island University Brooklyn campus and community
- Willingness to be video-taped
